"Doctors Without Borders" _____ / 5 points

Read the following text carefully. Then, answer the questions that follow.

Doctors Without Borders can intervene to help refugees. Sometimes refugees don't have clean water. The volunteers come with water and medicine. They teach refugees how to eat better and stay healthy. In 2004 there was a tsunami, or tidal wave, in South Asia. The tsunami destroyed many towns. Many people were hurt or killed. Doctors Without Borders worked for more than a year in countries that were hit by the tsunami. They gave people shots to make sure they did not get sick. The doctors gave people supplies like tents and clothing. They talked to people about what had happened. Sometimes just being there to listen to the victims helped the most.

Unseen Reading Comprehension

_____ / 5 points

- Read the following unseen passage. Then, answer the questions that follow.

Helping Hands in Difficult Times

When disasters like floods, earthquakes, or fires happen, many people lose their homes and belongings. They may not have enough food, clean water, or clothing. During these hard times, volunteers come together to help. They collect supplies such as bottled water, canned food, blankets, and medicine. These supplies are sent to the people who need them most.

Volunteers also help by organizing shelters, comforting children, and cleaning up damaged areas. Some even travel to different places to give their time and energy to others. Their kindness and hard work show that even small actions can make a big difference. When everyone works together, communities can recover and become stronger than before.
